

1. Hello Alex, my name is Justin Ng and I am a front-end developer. I am interested in applying for the role of junior developer at your company. My ability to collaborate well with others means that I would be well suited to this role and my passion for wanting to contribute to new and exciting projects would align with your core company values.
2. I am a recent graduate of Juno's web development bootcamp, where I built up a strong foundation and understanding of HTML, CSS and Javascript. There I was able to complete a portfolio, that contains both independent work as well as collaborative projects. I am always working on personal projects to continue practicing my coding skills and as well as broadening my knowledge as I have a passion for learning new things.
3. Before I decided to make a transition into web development, I was a field associate for Google maps, where I collected data with the aims of improving the accuracy of the Geo-locations for different types of businesses. My main takeaways from that role were collaborating within a team to achieve certain targets, effective time management and communicating with professionals from various industries.
4. I saw my time at this role as the first steppingstone into the tech industry and I am eager to continue learning and developing my Web Development skills and hopefully make a positive contribution to your team. Just below I have linked my Github so if you wished to take a quick look at what I've been working on, I'd really appreciate it.
